Richard Bowers Announced as New Greenbelt Chief of Police

The City of Greenbelt is pleased to announce the appointment of Mr. Richard (Rick) Bowers as chief of police. Chief Bowers brings over 25 years of law enforcement experience to Greenbelt. He started his career as an officer in Ocean City before moving to Takoma Park, where he has worked his way up the ranks from sergeant to acting chief over the past 23 years. The Takoma Park Police Department consists of 70 full-time employees and has a $9.9 million budget.

City Manager Nicole Ard stated, "It is incredible to have found a leader of Chief Bowers' caliber who offers a unique energy, as well as the experience in strategic planning, community engagement, employee development and crime reduction technology."

Bowers comes from a police agency that has embraced its community's diversity and actively works to build its trust. Bowers has a reputation for ethical behavior which he instills in his officers and motivates them to follow suit. Bowers' success in recruitment and retention of employees will be essential for the succession planning in Greenbelt. He is excited to join the Greenbelt team. "It is an honor to be selected as the chief of police

Food Pantry Serves Franklin Park's Displaced Fire Victims

by Lesley Kash

Help-by-Phone local food pantry volunteers delivered groceries on August 3 for victims of the recent Franklin Park fire. They took them to the bustling temporary relief center on Springhill Lane. Each of eight families who lost their homes to the fire and are awaiting their replacement apartments will be able to stock their new kitchens with a full complement of groceries.

Help-by-Phone volunteers Ron Dobson and Lesley Kash packed the dozens of bags of groceries in Help-by-Phone's food pantry in the Trinity Moravian Church on Good Luck Road. Dobson, who works a shift in the pantry every week, normally just packs for one family at a time, so this was a workout.

"We are happy to help people in need," he said, as he hauled down and sliced open cartons of donated cereal, tuna, soup, apple-sauce and you-name-it.

City, GHI Discuss Playground Compliance, Northway Fields

by Kathleen Gallagher

On July 16 the Greenbelt City Council held its annual stakeholder meeting with the board of directors of Greenbelt Homes, Inc. (GHI). All councilmembers were present, as were eight of the nine directors of the GHI board, including Steve Skolnik, Stefan Brodd, Ed James, Chuck Hess, Tami Watkins, Linda Seeley, Paul Kapfer and Stephen Holland. City Manager Nicole Ard and GHI General Manager Eldon Ralph were also in attendance.

It is often the case that agenda items for this worksession carry over from year to year for updates. Among these was the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission's proposal to replace water pipes for GHI's masonry homes that would then become GHI's responsibility to replace and maintain at a substantial cost. In a 1958 agreement signed by WSSC, the City of Greenbelt and GHI, WSSC took ownership of the water pipes up to the meter boxes located at the housing units. In more recent years, WSSC's proposals have moved the meter boxes closer to the street. In May of this year, WSSC presented another proposal that GHI is currently taking under consideration.

Right-of-Way

Another longstanding cooperative effort between the city and GHI involves resolution of right-of-way encroachment issues dating back to the origins of GHI homes as federal property. Over the years, GHI staff and city planning staff have made great strides in reducing the number of issues to be resolved. This project has recently slowed down because the planning department has not been fully staffed, but the expectation is that the pace will pick up again in the fall.

Playgrounds

Playgrounds, too, are a usual topic since the city and GHI participate in a playground agreement whereby the city maintains seven GHI-owned playgrounds, while GHI pays 25 percent of

Travis' Trommel Sifter Shifts To Franklin Park Test Mode

by René Sewell-Rayson

At first glance it looks like a Rube Goldberg invention – bicycle tire rims, quarter inch hardware cloth, plywood and some two-by-fours. It turns out it's a trommel sifter. Michael Travis' ingenuity created this low-tech answer to the problem of sifting almost-compost into garden-ready compost.

On Saturday, August 4, a group of hardy souls braved the heat and humidity to test whether this Community Impact Grant-funded project had reached its goal.

This is a three-bin composting system. The idea is that the scraps are collected in the first bin. Then they are transferred to the second bin which contains the mixture as it reaches the optimal 138°F, temperature which kills the bad bacteria and makes inoculate-organisms that will speed decomposition. Then the almost-compost cures in the final bin. Saturday's work session was to test whether everything was working.

"It's recycling for your vegetable and fruit peels, even your coffee grounds," offered Anne Wallace, a resident of Franklin Park. The three bins are located at the Springhill Lake Recreation Center. Neighbors bring their food scraps, weigh and record what has been saved from the

Step Club Thanks The Cristacos Family

The Greenbelt Step Club (GBSC) writes to publicly thank Marie and George Cristacos, the owners of Roosevelt Center, whose generous contribution, patience and courtesy allowed the GBSC to relocate its premises and continue its mission of providing a location where 12-step recovery groups can conduct their meetings in the City of Greenbelt.

In February 1990, the GBSC was founded in the basement of the Domino's Pizza building at 155 Centerway. The GBSC operated at that location continuously until the spring of 2013, when the property owners elected to pursue other uses for the premises.

Through the consideration and generosity of Mr. and Mrs. Cristacos, together with the substantial efforts of several skilled and unpaid professionals and the contributions of many volunteers who donated numerous hours, the GBSC was able to continue its mission at its new location at 143 Centerway. This past June 2018, the GBSC celebrated three years of continuous operation at this new location and should be able to continue operating at this location for many years into the future.

All 12-step programs rely upon the principle of anonymity as the foundation for their programs (thereby reminding members to place principles before personalities) and therefore the GBSC does not have a precise count of the people who attend meetings at the GBSC during any given period. However, several accurate gauges suggest that the total attendance at 12-step meetings held at the GBSC during the past year was about 15,000 persons who find that participating in their preferred 12-step program provides a useful tool for living a happy and useful life. The website for the GBSC includes a description of the various 12-step fellowships that hold meetings at the GBSC and the dates and times of those meetings.

The GBSC thanks Mrs. and Mr. Cristacos for recognizing the positive influence of 12-step organizations and their willingness to support the GBSC by providing a location where the Club can continue its mission for many years in the future.

ICE and Council Vote

I attended the recent city council work session on immigration on which you reported in your August 2 issue. I applaud the council's movement toward resolving police policy on non-criminal ICE warrants; however, I believe it is in the best interest of Greenbelt to have council vote publicly as a legislative body rather than remand this policy through administrative channels. It is important, given the rise of authoritarian populism nationally and internationally, that small cities such as ours exercise our civil liberties with resolve and conviction. This is common sense for our times.

Attorney General Jeff Sessions has threatened federal safety spending for communities that do not comply with his interpretation of federal immigration law (see New York Times, May 22, 2017). For Greenbelt's current budget, that amounts to $8,000. The Courts have also ruled that this threat oversteps the Executive Branch's authority. Were the federal government to somehow

A Nuanced, Delicate Soufflé

Joining "Eighth Grade" at Old Greenbelt Theatre this Friday, August 10, is debut writer/director Ofir Graizer's tender, melancholy love story, The Cakemaker. It depicts the grieving German baker Thomas (Tim Kalkhoff) seeking closure in Jerusalem where his lover, Oren (Roy Miller), has been killed in an auto accident. Thomas discovers that Oren was married to Anat (Sarah Adler), who owns a kosher restaurant. Without revealing their shared grief, Thomas succeeds as a pastry chef in Anat's employ. Regarded with suspicion at first, Thomas is nevertheless invited to Shabbat dinner.

There is considerable delicacy and restraint in the treatment of gay love, German-Israeli cultural interaction and how different people grieve differently.

No Shots? No School

Parents who received a letter from their child's school stating that the child is missing required immunizations should know that students who do not have required immunizations will be excluded from school.

Appointment times with pediatricians for immunizations may not be available in time for school. However, there are free immunization clinics at sites throughout the county this summer.

Visit pgcps.org/immunizations for more information on requirements, free clinics and more.

Registration Opens For Public Schools

Prince George's County public school offices are now open for registration for the upcoming academic year. Early registration of children, especially kindergarten-aged children (those who will be five years old by September 1, 2018), is important for staffing purposes.

Registration and other office business will take place at a temporary office that has been set up at Greenbelt Middle School at 6301 Breezewood Drive.

Registering parents/legal guardians will need a current mortgage statement/settlement papers or deed/GHI Mutual Ownership Contract for proof of residency, the child's original birth certificate, valid identification, immunization records and two pieces of mail (less than 30 days old) with the current address. If the child is transferring from another PGCPs school, parents or guardians should obtain a transfer document from the previous school as part of the registration process.

The Greenbelt Toastmasters Encourages Public Speaking

by Kim Keyes

According to the Mayo Clinic, fear of public speaking is a common form of anxiety. The Greenbelt chapter of Toastmasters is trying to combat this common fear by gently encouraging people to publicly speak in a supportive environment.

Meeting on the first, third and fifth Wednesday of the month at 7:30 p.m. in the basement of the Greenbelt Community Church, Toastmasters encourages people to practice their public speaking skills so they will feel confident enough to publicly speak in other environments, such as a business luncheon or onstage at a public festival.

According to Wikipedia, Toastmasters grew from a single club in Santa Ana, California, founded in 1924. The main purpose of the club was to improve the speaking skills of young men. Toastmasters remained a male-only organization until 1973, when women were first admitted. Today, Toastmasters serves over 352,000 members in 141 countries through its 16,400 member clubs.

According to the Greenbelt club secretary, David Alexander, the chapter was formed from two smaller struggling clubs. Marilyn Mack, who has since moved to Tennessee, was instrumental in merging the clubs and shifting the meetings to the current location at the Greenbelt Community Church. Alexander originally attended the meetings as a club coach and only later formally joined the chapter.

At first the meetings were held in a separate building behind the church but the club soon began to outgrow its space; it now meets in the basement of the main church building.

The August 1 meeting started with opening words by Sergeant at Arms Kalie Duong. President

Mary Jo Shapiro offered welcome comments and asked the visitors to introduce themselves and why they came. Miriam Goldfarb was the appointed toastmaster of the evening and her job was to make sure that the meeting ran smoothly and stayed on track. Alexander was the grammarian of the meeting and announced the Word of the Day. He instructed those present to snap their fingers every time a speaker uttered the word. He also served as the AH Counter, counting the number of awkward pauses any speaker made. Patricia Daukantas was the timekeeper whose job was to prevent the speakers from running over time.

The first portion of the meeting was dedicated to prepared speeches made by four members. Gwen Vaccaro gave the first speech, which was titled On My Path, the Icebreaker. Vaccaro

A Greener Labor Day Festival

Greenbelters recycle more than half of our waste material. Let's keep improving! One great way to educate and encourage the practice of recycling is to raise awareness during the Labor Day Festival.

Greenbelt Public Works, the Advisory Committee on Environmental Sustainability's Zero Waste Circle (Green ACES-ZWC), and the Green Team, are striving to make the Greenbelt Labor Day Festival as green as possible. Trash and recycling bins will be placed in sets side by side. Some compost bins will be available. Food vendors will provide mostly recyclable/compostable dinnerware. Volunteers will encourage people to put their refuse in the correct bin and will be available for questions.

If your waste is recyclable—and most will be—please discard it into a recycling bin, not the trash can. And put only recyclables in the recycling bins. Wherever available, put organic material in the compost bin.

Did you know that we are charged $59/ton to landfill, while we are charged only $25/ton for recyclables? If we save money on trash collection by recycling, we can use the savings for other city programs and activities.

Volunteers Needed to Encourage Recycling and Composting

Public Works, and Green ACES are seeking volunteers to stand near sets of recycling, trash, and compost bins to cheerfully encourage and help people “recycle the recyclables,” “compost the compostables,” and “trash the trash.”

Training will be provided at the Public Works building on Thursday, August 23 and Wednesday, August 29, at 7:30 PM. For students or any other volunteer we will be glad to sign community service hours and/or provide recommendations as appropriate. To register for the training please contact: Jason Martin, Greenbelt Environmental Coordinator, at jmartin@greenbeltnmd.gov

CMC Chorale Offers Workshop On Singing Beethoven’s Ninth

by Dorrie Bates

The Central Maryland Chorale (CMC), a local non-audition community chorus to which several Greenbelters belong, will be offering a workshop, Learning and Singing Beethoven’s Ninth Symphony on Saturday, August 25 at the Laurel Presbyterian Church, 7610 Old Sandy Spring Road, from 10 a.m. to noon.

The workshop will be led by Monica Otal, educator and voice coach, who has performed with the Washington Opera, the Baltimore Opera and the Wolf Trap Opera. Otal is also CMC’s artistic director.

The Ninth Symphony in D minor, with its well-known final movement based on the Ode to Joy, is regarded as one of Beethoven’s greatest works. In addition to presenting some history and context to the symphony, Otal will provide some guidelines on German diction and pronunciation. After warming up their voices, attendees will join together for a run-through of the final movement.

The workshop will also serve as an introduction to CMC and its upcoming season. Concerts in 2018-2019 include two performances presented in conjunction with the Montgomery Philharmonic and a pops concert. The Beethoven symphony will be featured in CMC’s winter concert.

Greenbelters get ready for their next season of singing: Ed Neuschler, Monica McAbee, Eric Yore, Girale Wilson and Lynn Demos at the piano.

The chorale will sing Brahms’s German Requiem in the spring.

CMC members come from throughout the Metro region. 2018 marks its 50th year of performing.

Singers of all levels are welcome to the workshop. There is no advance registration required but there is a small fee. For more information about the workshop or the CMC go to centralmaryland-chorale.org or call 240-478-7952.

landfills and then add an equal amount of woodchips provided by the Department of Public Works. The three bins are designed to turn table scraps into earth-rich nutrients. This food scrap hot-composting pilot is honchoed by Greenbelt’s Zero Waste Circle.

The final step is to test whether the end product is garden-ready. A tester will place a small amount into a plastic baggie. Then in a week the tester will open the bag and smell it. If it smells earthy and sweet then the process worked, but if it smells ammonia-like, then it’s back to the drawing board to tweak the process. But the smell test isn’t the only way to see if the mixture has become usable compost. The Earth Squad, a group of middle schoolers/quality control agents as part of CHEARS (Chesapeake Education, Arts and Research Society, a Greenbelt non-profit organization), will perform germination tests. They’ll plant radish seeds in cups containing the compost and compare it to some control samples from other sources. The final product will be offered to community gardening groups like CHEARS’ Three Sisters Gardens. Saturday’s three-hour work session yielded about 300 pounds of compost.

Neighbors are invited to come out and join the human-powered bucket brigade, help turn the trommel sifter and learn more about hot composting. Work sessions will meet at the Springhill Lake Recreation Center for the spoke of her life, describing a childhood with frequent family moves; she pulled out a map and pointed out the various places she had lived. At one point she used a series of written Post-It Notes as a visual aid when she described her various roles over the years, including daughter, sister, wife, mother, grandmother, nurse and spa owner. When she said the word “sagacity” those present snapped their fingers.

Yang Song gave the second speech, Here I Am. He described his childhood in China and what his hometown was like, including being very cold in the winter. He moved to the U.S. for graduate studies in Rochester, N.Y., where he got both his master’s and Ph.D. He studied for a second master’s degree at the University of Maryland, where he realized that he was not cut out for a career in physics, and has stayed in the metro area since.

Shapiro gave the third speech, Learning to Lead. She related how her current stint as president of the Greenbelt Toastmasters chapter is the first office she has ever formally held. She discussed her leadership style, which took a while for her to understand.

Justine Desmarais gave the final speech Remember to Breathe. She spoke about her anxiety regarding public speaking and how she’s an introvert by nature. She described the time as a student when she was asked to read a paragraph in class but was so nervous that she literally couldn’t speak. She too, used “sagacity” in her speech.

After the prepared speeches it was time for Table Talk. In this section, Goldfarb pulled up questions at random and invited anyone, even guests, to give a one- or two-minute speech answering each question. The questions asked included: What do you admire about your parents? If you could work as an assistant for anyone you want, who would it be? Would you rather visit the big city or the countryside? and What’s your favorite quotation? During Table Talk one of the participants used “sagacity,” prompting more finger snapping.

At that point it was time for the four evaluators to speak. Each evaluator was assigned one of the prepared speeches given earlier and took notes while the speaker spoke. The evaluator offered constructive criticism including helpful hints and advice for the speaker to incorporate into the speech.

Alexander returned to the podium, reporting that the Word of the Day, sagacity, was uttered three times. He then reported the number of awkward pauses he heard during both the prepared speeches and Table Talk.

Daukantas announced that all of the speakers had stuck within their allotted time frame.

The meeting concluded after the general evaluator gave an evaluation of the overall meeting, reporting that it was conducted well with no slow part or having the meeting run overtime.

the costs for playground improvements undertaken by the city. In response to questions from GHI, Brian Townsend, assistant director of the Public Works Department, talked about compliance of the playgrounds with the accepted standards for public playgrounds, the inspection schedules, and the training of staff to undertake playground inspections. The city agreed to make playground inspection reports available to GHI for its playgrounds on a quarterly basis.

Northway Fields

Among new topics on the agenda was a request from GHI that the city allow GHI contractors to deposit leaves, wood chips and tree trunks at Northway Fields as they used to be permitted to do. While GHI employees are still allowed to bring leaves to Northway, it is costing GHI a good deal of money to arrange for disposal of materials that Greenbelt residents in other parts of town would be allowed to bring to Northway.

Townsend said any resident who gets a permit, including any resident of GHI, is allowed to bring yard waste to Northway. Not even contractors working for the city are allowed to use Northway any longer, however, for the simple reason that the location is running out of space. Discussion then ensued about ways the city and GHI might work together to find creative new uses for the material or, as Councilmember Edward Putens suggested, to explore possible interest by large landscaping companies that use a

GATe Attends Conference, Begins Plans for the Future

by Konrad Herling

Recently, Greenbelt Access Television, Inc.’s (GATe) board of directors attended a conference of the Alliance for Community Media (ACM). ACM is a national organization that promotes civic engagement through community media. The conference, held in Baltimore, featured discussions regarding fund-raising, various legal issues, common concerns and challenges, and an inspiring keynote address by Amy Goodman, whose Democracy Now program airs on GATe channels 19 (Verizon) and 77 (Xfinity).

Station Manager Phoebe McFarb agreed to explore arranging for Democracy Now to be more regularly scheduled on the GATe channels.

Also attending the conference were access directors from Hyattsville and Bowie, which inspired possible mutual efforts to benefit all three communities. GATe’s treasurer, Frank Gervasi, has learned much from visiting Laurel’s public access studio and has urged that GATe visit the other area community access stations and the County’s Community Television in Largo as well.

Aside from meeting with other ACM members, observing and inquiring about the wide array of equipment that allows greater possibilities in covering community activities and interests, GATe vice president, Ray Rayson proposed establishing several committees that board members would chair: administration, to serve as liaison between the board and staff; finances, which would explore fund-raising including grants; production, to consider community interests and to attract greater membership to take GATe’s classes and actually produce community programming; and the existing Utopia Film Festival Committee. The board will take this up at a future meeting.

GATe, after 22 years of benefiting from experienced directors Kjel Forsting and Malia Murray, is exploring how it can not only continue to provide classes in film-making, editing, script-writing, etc., but expand its programming to tap more into community issues and concerns. The board is exploring meeting with the County’s Community Television to secure advice as to how to best achieve that goal.

In the meantime, McFarb continues to write and produce a regular newsletter to inform membership and the public and to teach new members the ins and outs of television production. She is assisted by Alan Haley who handles phone calls and reviews, going through the equipment with public access users before it goes out “on the road,” as well as helping with public presentations. George Kochell, who recently received an award of appreciation for his work with GAVA/GATe over 20 years, continues to teach youngsters and teens the art of animation.

GATe will provide more frequent updates on its activities in the Greenbelt News Review and newsletters to its 48 members. For those interested in individual productions that would be shared over the air or in covering news stories as part of a group, call GATe at 301-507-6581.

Help Create a Greener, More Sustainable Labor Day Fest

by John Lippert

Greenbelters recycle more than half of their waste material. Let’s keep improving. One great way to educate and encourage the practice of recycling is to raise awareness during the Labor Day Festival.

Greenbelt Public Works, the Green Team’s Zero Waste Circle and the Greenbelt Advisory Committee on Environmental Sustainability (GreenACES) are striving to make the Labor Day Festival as green as possible. Trash and recycling bins will be grouped together in pairs, side by side. Some compost bins may be available if there are enough volunteers. Volunteers will encourage people to put their refuse in the correct bin and will be available for questions. Fun environmental games will be held at the Public Works booth.

If your waste is recyclable – and much will be – discard it into a recycling bin, not the trash can. Put only recyclables in the recycling bins. And put organic material in a compost bin if available.

Did you know that the city is charged $59 per ton to landfill and only $25 per ton for recyclables? Money saved on trash collection by recycling can be used for other city programs and activities.

Volunteers Needed
Volunteers are needed to stand near sets of recycling, trash and compost bins to cheerfully encourage and help people to recycle the recyclables, compost the compostables and trash the (hopefully very little) trash.

for the City of Greenbelt. The police department has an exceptional reputation and I am excited to join the staff. I am looking forward to working with city residents to build lasting partnerships.” Bowers’ credentials include graduation from the highly selective FBI National Academy, as well as Northwestern University School of Staff and Command. He earned a bachelor’s degree in criminal justice from Southern New Hampshire University and a master’s degree in management from University of Maryland University College. He is a member of the Federal Bureau of Investigation National Academy Associations Maryland Chapter, the International Chiefs of Police Association, Maryland Chiefs of Police Association and Fraternal Order of Police Lodge 35.

Bowers was selected from 53 applicants who applied for the position through the management and executive recruitment firm Springsted/Waters. Seventeen semi-finalists were narrowed to six finalists who participated in a two-and-a-half day assessment center interacting with council and members of the public and police department, as well as five interview panels consisting of regional police chiefs, a citizen panel, a panel of staff from throughout the city government, including a representative of the Fraternal Order of Police and a non-sworn police employee, Greenbelt police command staff and the city manager and assistant city manager.

Bowers replaces a chief who retired after serving for over 40 years. Major Tom Kemp served as acting chief following that retirement. “I want to thank Tom for his service. Tom and the entire Police Department staff (sworn and non-sworn), as well as the Fraternal Order of Police leadership deserve thanks for their hard work, creativity and dedication to our community. The Greenbelt Police Department is moving in a positive direction,” said Ard.

Bowers will start work the week of August 27. A swearing-in ceremony will be held on Monday, August 27 at 7:30 p.m. in the Council Chambers in the Municipal Building.

successfully extend such tactics, there are larger amounts of money at stake – $1.09 million in federal housing grants, for instance. It is understandable that council members are uneasy about this possibility. But, as historian Tim Snyder has written, complying in advance with bullies does not ensure civic safety and liberty; rather, it is only the full exercise of civil rights that offers us real protection in the long run.

I would urge members of our city council to vote publicly for this policy. While this may be uncomfortable at times, defending the rights of both documented and undocumented residents may require some discomfort both now and in the future.

Millicent Allenby

ICE Policy Document

This is to thank Kathleen Gallagher for her August 2 article covering the two hours of discussion at the July 18 city council work session about the city’s policy on ICE detainer requests. It is reassuring that the city’s police department apparently plans to create a General Order for police officers to follow. As Ms. Gallagher described, several members of the public at the work session stressed the importance of publishing and disseminating a city ICE policy. Publication of a city policy would increase the chance that all members of the Greenbelt community would understand it and would no longer live in fear of their city government and their police officers. Hopefully very soon, the city council will act on and publish its policy statement, so the policy will no longer be in doubt.

Another Mountain Lion Sighting?

Perhaps the possible sighting of a mountain lion in Greenbelt Park last week really was a coyote; but then again maybe not. I am reluctant to spread more fear concerning the sighting, but during the last week of May, I also saw what I thought was a mountain lion in my backyard in Old Greenbelt. I was so startled, and too busy with other things to deal with the thought, that I did nothing. Today, I went to report what I saw to a park ranger.

Rarely do wild creatures hold still long enough for us to get a perfect picture view of them. We make determinations, correctly or not, by what we see of their shape, size, color, movement and sound. Proximity to known habitat is becoming less of an identifying factor as wild creature populations are adapting to modern day habitats.

I am not a studied wildlife person, but during the past 30 years or so, I have sought out quiet spaces in wilderness areas during my vacation time. I have found myself face-to-face with moose, wolves, coyotes, deer, foxes; I have petted whales, dodged sea turtles and, yes, was within a few feet of a mountain lion checking me out at the edge of my parking lights on a mountain top at Lake Tahoe while I was looking at the stars. Not that I want you to think I am brave or anything like that, because the sighting a small worm snake in my yard sends me screaming into my house!

So why get concerned about a mountain lion? Because they are cats. They can leap into trees. They hunt for fun as well as food. Who hasn’t had their pet cat bring them a mouse as a gift? Coyotes look and walk like dogs. They have bushy tails and long ears, and are a bit red in their brown color. They are very well suited to live in the suburbs, and in parks out West, they come right up to you begging for food.

The News Review reported that mountain lions have confirmed sightings in Western Maryland. It is an easy bicycle ride along the canal towpath beside the Potomac River from there to Rock Creek Park; the Paint Branch park and into Greenbelt. There are railroad tracks to the Agricultural farm and north, as well as woodland connections to the Patuxent Park and onward.

It is not a far stretch of the imagination that wilderness creatures can easily get to Greenbelt and find it a nice place to live.

Our Greenbelt wooded areas with their diversity of trees, plants, cute animals and song birds, could also provide shelter for some wild critters posing a potential threat to pets and small children. While walking my small dog every morning, I have seen many kinds of creatures moving about within a two-block section of Ridge Road, including foxes and a coyote.

What I saw in May was a creature moving away from me into the woods. It was maybe in the range of knee to waist high. It had short light brown hair on its back, short ears, no bushy tail and walked like a cat. Was it a mountain lion? Not enough information to be certain, but I thought it was. It only matters because if there is a mountain lion living in Greenbelt, we need to be very careful of our supervision of our children and pets. My dog still will not go out alone on our deck. My neighbor tells me the family cat has been timid about leaving the house for weeks.

Where Have All The Cougars Gone?

Last week’s article on the unconfirmed sighting of a mountain lion in Greenbelt Park cited a park ranger as having said that even in western Maryland where mountain lion sightings have been confirmed, they are rare. That allegation pinned my BS-meter – I’ve lived in Maryland for decades, and have heard of no such confirmed sightings, something that I am certain to have remembered. So, I went on line to see what I could find.

First, in February this year the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service removed the eastern cougar from the endangered species list after a five-year study (fws.gov/northeast/ecougar/index.html). The reason? They are extinct. Apparently, there have been no confirmed sightings of eastern cougars since about the mid-20th century. This agrees with the Maryland Department of Natural Resources (DNR) at dnr.maryland.gov/wildlife/pages/plants_wildlife/mammals.aspx that includes the eastern cougar among the species of mammals that can no longer be found in the wild in the state. I spoke with a friend who lives in Garrett County who said that he has heard of occasional sightings, but none confirmed. Finally, I went to the website of Cumberland Times-News and searched for articles on cougar sightings. The only relevant article that I could find was written by the outdoors editor Michael Sawyers. He says that he hears occasional reports of cougar sightings that he finds credible, but that follow-up by DNR has never found hard evidence. The sort of evidence that DNR would find convincing include tracks, scat or prey carcasses.

There’s debunking of a reported sighting at daggerpress.com/2018/06/10/evidence-mountain-lion-fallston-maryland/.

There was one confirmed case in 2011 of a cougar that travelled from South Dakota all the way to Connecticut before it was killed in a collision with a car. In this case, naturalists were able to trace its path by the hard evidence that it left all the way from South Dakota. It’s difficult for even a stealthy cougar to make its way from the west without leaving a trail.

In short, you can rest easy. Not only are there no cougars in Greenbelt Park or in Maryland, but there are no cougars in the entire northeast U.S.

GEMZ Program Hosts First Entrepreneurship Program

by Adeola Ariyo Enikanoselu

The GEMZ, a mentoring and leadership program for girls between the ages of 11 and 18, hosted its first GEMZ STE(A)M and Entrepreneurship Camp on July 19 to 21. It was a full three days of activities that included sessions and workshops on voiceingredients and the need to connect youth to age-appropriate volunteer opportunities in the D.C. metro area.

The last day included a hands-on software coding/programming class where the girls were taught how to code and build a personal over technology, introduction to TV production facilitated by the Greenbelt Access Television, and personal branding. On the second day, the girls participated in an all-day entrepreneurship workshop facilitated by BEACON DC at WeWorks in Washington's Navy Yard neighborhood, where they were taught how to come up with a business idea by providing a solution to a pressing problem, conduct market research, create a business plan and minimum viable proposition, and the art of pitching.

The girls brainstormed problems they would like to address including the lack of clean water in low income neighborhoods, enhancing mental health awareness, decreasing suicide rates among teens, create hygiene and body products with no harmful or business webpage from scratch using html and java. The girls also participated in a science lab where they created unique personal fragrances. The day wrapped up with educating the girls on the importance of personal branding and how to stay safe online and on social media platforms.

The camp was possible due to The GEMZ founder Adeola Ariyo Enikanoselu's vision, The GEMZ volunteer staff and team, Greenbelt Community Foundation, City of Greenbelt, New Wave Foundation, BEACON DC and Walmart.

Dan Kennedy's Greenbelt Art On Display at New Deal Café

by Melissa Sites

A gas station or a court of Greenbelt town houses might not seem the most likely subjects for great paintings, but Dan Kennedy's beautiful art work, currently on display at the New Deal Café, might change your mind.

Two paintings hanging in the front room at the café depict the current Sunoco gas station on Crescent Road and Kennedy has captured the gas station as a study of architecture and urban machinery, contrasted against the fully-grown mature oaks so treasured by city residents. In another painting, seen from a different angle, just the yellow Sunoco sign and the crosswalks are visible. This allows the industrial image of the gas station to give way to the natural beauty of the autumn foliage.

To see something in a new light means to gain fresh understanding. Artists develop the skill of seeing the world we inhabit in fresh, new ways. Kennedy's retrospective offers the residents of Greenbelt a great gift through his painting career, portraying familiar environs with clarity and precision.

Plein-Air

Kennedy is well known in Greenbelt for his facility with the plein-air technique, an outdoors, on-site oil and acrylic painting method pioneered by the 19th-century French Impressionists with the goal of capturing light and shadows precisely in the moment. This technique gives Kennedy's paintings reality and immediacy and invites the viewer to contemplate how the artist carefully constructs a realist painting to include fine detail while artistically recreating the scene as a beautiful, pleasant image. This technique allows Kennedy to paint the houses and courts of Greenbelt while elevating these locales to works of art.

Almost all of Kennedy's works are landscapes, but in addition to two restful and bucolic portraits of covered bridges, the retrospective features a beautiful full-length portrait of a lady, Alicia De Jesus Dela Varga, who leans restlessly against a vanity. The lines of her limbs and lavender gown are confident and flowing while her face is sparingly sketched. Kennedy has also worked on murals and sculpture.

Longtime Local Artist

Kennedy was inspired to take up plein-air painting by painter Eric Sloan and went on to practice and teach the technique here in Greenbelt. Because Kennedy has been painting here in Greenbelt since 1969, his friends, neighbors and community members wanted to book a retrospective show at the New Deal. Kennedy's paintings are on display around Greenbelt, including a large-scale work in the GHI offices, but the works in the retrospective are not for sale. One of his paintings hung at Greenbelt Elementary School for many years. Another hangs at the Community Center.

Painting is a Constant

Born in Johnstown, Pa., Kennedy graduated from Green Park Union High School. Kim Kennedy, the artist's daughter, reported that he has been painting since 9 years of age. He was married to Thelma (née Mahl) for 60 years, and raised four children in Greenbelt. His daughter notes, "I'd come home in the summer from the swimming pool, and my dad would be sitting out in the yard with his chair and his easel." Kennedy worked at the headquarters for the Communication Workers of America in Washington D.C., but always kept up his painting. Artist Mike McMullin, who had a studio across the hall from Kennedy in the Community Center, assisted him in painting a well-loved mural of a train station around 1999, which is now gone from its College Park site.

The show and reception were sponsored by the Friends of New Deal Café Arts. The New Deal is concurrently presenting a show by Michael Burroughs (MFA, Boston University), a Prince George's County native who teaches at Suitland and creates collage works that find natural beauty in an urban setting.

At the reception, Greenbelt Community Foundation representative Linda Thompson presented FONDCA with a grant award of $1,530 to help the arts non-profit continue to find new artists and display their work. Violin soloist Allison Graham provided music for the reception.
